

CLEVER MOVE IS DISCOVERED IN THE RESOLUTION

PLAN TO STEAL A MARCH ON STATE CONSTITUTION.

FAVORS COUNTY OPTION?

Measure Might Compel Legislature To Pass Much Mooted Law Without Meaning To.

Madison, Wis., Jan. 18.—The Wisconsin legislature may "steal a march" on the state constitution if a joint resolution introduced by Assemblyman C. F. Billings of Lafayette is adopted. The measure in effect would secure the adoption of the initiative and referendum principle in this state without the necessity of a constitutional amendment.

Mr. Billings' resolution provides that the joint committee on rules shall report a rule that whenever a bill shall be presented to the chief clerk of either house, by a member or any other person, accompanied by a petition signed by ten per cent of the number of voters cast at the last general election, then such bill, if it does not become a law by passage in the legislature and signature by the governor within twenty days thereafter, shall be passed with a condition attached thereto that it shall be in force and take effect only after it shall have been submitted to the electors of the state at the next general election, and approved by a majority of such electors.

Under the proposed rule, for instance the legislature might be compelled to pass a tentative county option measure, the ratification of which by the people might be accomplished by the operation of the referendum election.

SOLUTION SOUGHT BY MILITARY MEN

Congress Asked To Decide Supremacy
Of Officers In Joint Operation of Soldiers and Sailors.

Washington, Jan. 19.—Congress is now asked to settle a problem which army and navy officers consider likely to develop into a serious matter. The military men want Congress to decide what service, in case of a joint operation of soldiers and sailors, shall have the right to command. For example, if a combined attack were being made upon a foreign shore, with battleships taking part, and marines included also, there is no provision in the United States statutes as to who should be in command of such an operation.

The general board, composed of both army and navy officers, suggests to Congress a simple means of settling the point. They would have this rule enacted: let the army command every man on land, whether soldier or sailor, and let the navy give orders to everyone when afloat.

Thus soldiers on a transport, or being landed on the shore, would be under command of the ranking naval officer present. As soon as the sailors, if any were included in the landing party, left the beach, they would be under command of the ranking army officer. It is also proposed to have the Marine Corps subject to the orders of the service to which it is detailed in any specific instance. If it were detailed to assist the army, it would be a component part of the army, and subject to its orders. If its commanding officer were transferred by the army officers present the latter would command; on the other hand, the Marine Corps officer would command the force of soldiers and marines if he were the highest in grade.

The military authorities have the support of the President in asking for legislation to cover these points, and are earnestly hoping that the bill will pass. Other measures, to further adjust the relations of army, navy, and Marine Corps, are under consideration.

gelical Bodies of Country Discussed At Conference In

Announcement will be made shortly of the names of the ninety cities in which the campaign is to be conducted. A committee of 100 is to be appointed in each city to consist of representatives of all religious organizations participating in the campaign. NEW BILLS APPEAR BY THE SCORE IN THE LEGISLATURE

Usual Number Of Bills Expected On Many Measures—Some Freak
Issues Brought Up.

Madison, Wis., Jan. 19.—Advocates of a law permitting the spring shooting of ducks are getting ready to precipitate the biennial scramble over this subject in the legislature. For the past decade, bills to permit spring shooting have been introduced, but at each session the fight for the law has been somewhat formidable. How the question will not be known at least before a bill comes in and hearings are started before the respective fish and game committees of the two houses.

Anticipating the appearance of such a bill, the Wisconsin Audubon society is getting ready for its regular fight against the measure, and circular letters are being mailed to legislators and newspapers, accompanied by pamphlets purporting to show the disastrous results of spring shooting. Prof. George Wagner of the University of Wisconsin is president of the society.

A bill drawn at the instigation of State Treasurer Dahl, providing for the sale of state lands to actual settlers in small lots on time payments will shortly make its appearance. The measure is designed to promote settlement of the northern lands by persons who will improve them and help to build up the sparsely settled regions now covered for the most part with stumps and stones. It probably will allow the buyer to deposit about 15 per cent of the purchase price and pay the rest in perhaps twenty yearly installments at as low a rate of interest as possible—probably five per cent. Mr. Dahl declares the state will be better off financially as well as in other ways if the new plan is adopted, as at present the sums received for state lands are deposited in banks and draw not more than 3 per cent interest.

A "telephone connection" bill is being drawn which will give to one company the right to purchase another's property by condemnation when it can be shown that the line purchased would be necessary to secure proper toll connections. The proposed law would give to the railroad commission the regulation of this matter, requiring that that board must first issue an order before condemnation proceedings can be begun. The Wisconsin Telephone company is said to be in possession of the telephone bill as a natural monopoly. It is expected that the bill will be bitterly opposed by the independent companies of the state, most of which conduct farmers' lines.

In fact, every conceivable subject is usually covered in the flood of bills that flows into the legislature mill every two years, and although the present session is but a few days old, nearly two score are already in the hands of various committees which propose all sorts of changes or additions to the already overburdened statutes. Many of them propose amendments to existing laws and others create entirely new sections. Practically all so far have to do with subjects of general state interest.

One of the first bills offered would remove from county treasurers the disability from serving more than two consecutive terms. Along this line also is a proposed amendment to the constitution which takes away the prohibition against sheriffs serving consecutive terms.

An interesting addition offered to the present law relating to the survival of actions for damages allows non-resident alien relatives to recover for the death of a relative, whenever the action is brought by the "personal representative" of such alien.

Another bill would repeal the act of 1909 creating the office of the act of 1909 creating the office of "divorce counsel." This office, who is appointed by the circuit court in each county, is supposed to watch all divorce actions and whenever he believes there is collusion, that the rights of either party are not safeguarded, or that the public interest is affected, to step in and represent the state as counsel. Little is known at present as to the working of the law, and it is not known that any considerable opposition has arisen to the continuance of the office.

The widespread sentiment in favor of restricting the powers of justices of the peace is represented in a bill to limit the jurisdiction of justices who also act in criminal cases to such cases as arise under ordinances and by-laws of villages.

Two measures relate to the sale of liquor. The primary election day, one repealing one of the acts relating to the subject and the other amending another section on the same subject. In the latter case the law would be made to apply to "any person" instead of "any tavern-keeper or other person," as it applies at present.

Titles of bills as read by the chief clerk and printed on the calendars are often confusing. For instance: "A bill to create Sec. 446B-1 of the statutes, relating to coercing or influencing of employers to discharge employees," actually would prohibit such action.

Thirty-six hours for all employed persons, including those who work in state institutions, is provided in a social/democratic bill. Both fine and imprisonment are the penalties fixed. It is also proposed to amend the law prohibiting the re-marriage of divorced persons within one year after decree is granted, and allowing the judge granting the divorce to authorize re-marriage of such divorced persons to each other whenever he shall deem it proper and wise.

Another Accident: Mrs. Lott Swan while leaving her home on Center avenue, Tuesday, slipped on the icy steps and fell dislocating her right shoulder and sustaining other injuries which will keep her confined to her home for some time. Her friends hope for a speedy recovery.

The resolution also provides for the certification of the reports to the district attorney of Dane County and the Attorney General with the request that prosecution be commenced against all persons guilty of bribery and corrupt practices in connection with the Stephenson's election in the primaries of 1908. The resolution together with the committee reports were laid over until next Tuesday in accordance with certain rules of the legislative body.

The senate today confirmed the appointments by Gov. McGovern of A. E. Knott of Kenosha, as state bank commissioner; Louis F. Meyer of Milwaukee as state oil inspector and David Harlowe of Milwaukee as a member of the state railway commission.

Sen. John M. Whitehead of Janesville, opposed the appointment of Knott and refused to vote to confirm. He declared a change in banking department of state was unwarranted. Sen. M. W. Perry of Alcona refused to vote either way on the bank appointment.

The assembly committee on elections this afternoon commenced the hearing of the contests between H. A. Haglund, Rep. and Peter Naalom, Dem. over the right to a seat in the assembly for one of the Trempealeau County districts. The hearing will not be completed for some days it is said.

Resolutions were introduced in both the senate and assembly providing for the constitutional amendment providing for the election of United States Senators by direct vote; adoption of the recall; the initiative and referendum with respect to enactment of laws and to empower the legislature more liberal appropriations for true preservation of water powers and forest reserves.

The joint committee on industrial insurance this afternoon resumed its hearing on that subject.

COLONEL SMITH DIED IN MILWAUKEE TODAY

Former Editor of the Gazette Passed Away at Trinity Hospital Following a Painful Accident.

Colonel Nicholas Smith, for many years editor of The Gazette, died at Trinity hospital in Milwaukee, at an early hour this morning. He had been in failing health for a number of years, and a great sufferer from insomnia, but the immediate cause of his death was an accident which befell him, a month ago, resulting in a broken leg. The shock was too much for his advanced age and weakened condition. Mr. Smith was born October 21, 1837, in Lancashire, England. When a child he came to America with an older brother, finding a home with an aunt at Fall River, Massachusetts, where his father joined him a year later, finding employment as a cotton weaver.

In 1844 the family moved to Grant county, Wis. At the age of eleven he went to work in the lead mines, and for twelve years followed this occupation, becoming a skillful miner. Mr. Smith was of studious mind and in spite of early disadvantages gained an education and studied law. In 1862 he was admitted to the bar, but instead of opening an office, responded to the call of his country, joining the 33rd Wisconsin Infantry. A few months later he was commissioned as second lieutenant and in the spring of 1863 was made captain. He was in active service, participating in many hard campaigns until wounded, and compelled to resign in January, 1865. At the close of the war he engaged in the practice of law and later became interested in newspaper work, owning papers at Waukesha and Prairie du Chien. In 1874 he came to Janesville and two years later he became editor of the Gazette, which position he held for many years. He was also a member of the state board of supervisors. Later he became editor of the Fond du Lac Commonwealth, which position he held until compelled to retire from active work, when he moved to Milwaukee, where he has since resided.

Mr. Smith possessed a strong personality. He was a vigorous and forceful writer, and a prominent factor in the republican party during the years of his active work. He was also the author of a number of books, the latest, "Memoirs of General Grant," being his master piece. He had a host of friends in Janesville who will extend sympathy to the wife and children who mourn. The funeral will be held on Saturday at 2:00 p. m. in Milwaukee.

FALLS TWELVE FEET FROM ICY RUNWAY

Al. Thurler Receives Bad Cut in Head in Fall From Runway At Lower Ice House.

Al Thurler, an employee of the City Ice company, is laid up at his home on Rock street with a severe scalp wound as the result of a fall yesterday from the second runway on the outside of the lower storage building, a distance of about twelve feet. Thurler was trying to extricate a block of ice which had become lodged in the turn of the runway when his pipe pole slipped, causing him to fall backward to the ground below, striking on his head. The ground underneath is littered with blocks of ice and it was in hitting one of these that a three inch gash was cut in his scalp, well towards the front of his head. The man was assisted to a carriage in a semi-unconscious condition and taken to the office of Dr. Burns where the wound was attended to. Thurler is an old employee of the company and has always been a careful worker. The accident was unavoidable and it was a fortunate thing that a more severe injury was not the result.

Albany, Jan. 19.—Peter K. Daderick, an Albany manufacturer and inventor of many patents, is dead at Daytona, Fla., where he went a short time ago. He was born in Columbia county, New York, Feb. 1, 1833, of revolutionary ancestry. During his active years, about 300 American and foreign patents were granted him, mostly on agricultural machinery. Nearly all his processes throughout the world are copied from Daderick's patents.

YOUTH ARRESTED ON CHARGE OF THEFT

Alleged to Have Been Committed in Red Eye, Iowa, December 20th Last.

Ray Saunders, aged 19, a former resident of Milton and wanted in Red Eye, Iowa, for alleged larceny of the St. Paul depot at that place of $1,500 worth of tickets on December 20th of last year, was caught at White-water last night and brought to this city this morning by Deputy Sheriff Arlison of Milton. The latter started for Red Eye with his prisoner today. After the robbery was committed the sheriff of the county where the theft was pulled off, came to this state and warned the officers at Milton and White-water to be on the lookout for the lad. When taken by Sheriff Arlison he was given the choice of remaining for a while in the county jail here or going straight to Iowa and he chose the latter.

The youthful robber, it is alleged, did not get any money, but got away with all the loose tickets in sight. He will be arraigned and tried in Red Eye.

FALLS TWELVE FEET FROM ICY RUNWAY

Al. Thurler Receives Bad Cut in Head in Fall From Runway At Lower Ice House.

Al Thurler, an employee of the City Ice company, is laid up at his home on Rock street with a severe scalp wound as the result of a fall yesterday from the second runway on the outside of the lower storage building, a distance of about twelve feet. Thurler was trying to extricate a block of ice which had become lodged in the turn of the runway when his pipe pole slipped, causing him to fall backward to the ground below, striking on his head. The ground underneath is littered with blocks of ice and it was in hitting one of these that a three inch gash was cut in his scalp, well towards the front of his head. The man was assisted to a carriage in a semi-unconscious condition and taken to the office of Dr. Burns where the wound was attended to. Thurler is an old employee of the company and has always been a careful worker. The accident was unavoidable and it was a fortunate thing that a more severe injury was not the result.

received from one of our satisfied buyers. We have hundreds of the same kind on file.

Crystal City, Texas, January 10, 1911.

My Dear Mr. Williams, Janesville, Wis.

They got the pump working yesterday on the land those Dunkards settled on last excursion and they were so well pleased with the flow of water they followed Mr. Buckingham in town and contracted for another large tract of land. His office was crowded last night and he told me he sold more land yesterday and today through the relatives and friends of the people that came down on the last excursion than they did on the excursion I first came down on.

The buyer for this Dunkard colony, you remember, spent a year and a half traveling looking for a location. This speaks well for Cross "S".

There were 4 jumping engines delivered here last night. I believe seeing these wells with a pump working them equal to two flowing wells. Mr. Buckingham's contract with Dr. Patter for all of sect. 28 except 2 farms I got for my cousin. Dr. Patter has sold 15 farms on sect. 30 to a friend of his in Vermont that has never been here. He wired he would be here on the 17th excursion with about 10 men and they would, he felt sure, take all of sect. 28. I was offered $25.00 profit, on my river farms. I can put water on this land for $1,100.00. Thank you, I don't want $200 for it. I see too many that got from $300. to $600 for their crop last year.

The weather is grand. We have had every meal since we have been here on the porch except one. It was not too cool then but the breeze kept blowing the lamp out.

We expect 25 Mexicans from over the line tomorrow; hired them for 60c, if they don't get what coming up and want more.

When anyone comes here from Janesville, tell them I will be glad to see them. They will be glad they came. I feel like hugging you for getting me down here.

With best wishes, I am, Yours truly, W. T. HEBST.

P. S.—Please start tractor from there, after my car household goods, to a friend of his in Vermont that

NO CENTRAL BANK.

The Monetary commission, appointed by congress two years ago to investigate banking systems throughout the world, has just presented the result of their work through its chairman, Honorable Nelson A. Aldrich, in a carefully prepared report.

It was generally supposed that the commission would favor a central bank similar in character to systems employed in several foreign countries, and objections have been freely offered by insurgents who argued that a central bank simply meant Wall Street domination, with Rockefeller and Morgan controlling not only the oil and the railroads, but the money of the country as well.

The report indicates, however, that the span was unnecessary, as it has nothing to say about a central bank, but recommends instead a centralizing bank to be known as the Reserve Association of America, whose stock is to be held only by national banks. This reserve association is to have a capital of $300,000,000 and is to be controlled by a board of directors, representing the national banks that belong to the association, the government, and the commercial and industrial interests of the country.

The plan is elaborately worked out, to the most minute detail. It aims to re-model our present financial system, without disturbance, and develop a system in keeping with the demands of the nation.

The present season of congress is so busy cleaning house that no time can be spared to consider important business, and the report will doubtless slumber in a pigeon hole until the next session, but the preliminary work of the committee is good and should result in giving the people a financial system that will eliminate future currency panics and command the respect of other nations.

TAKE TIME TO THINK.

If the American people are anything, they are impulsive, and this characteristic was never more pronounced than at the present time. The epidemic of reform, which has swept over the country like a tidal wave, has become acute, in many cases creating public sentiment, on some questions, that is far from practical.

One of these questions of doubtful utility is the much discussed change in the method of electing United States senators. Several of the western states, where the pernicious primary law is in force, express their choice by popular vote for senators, and while this expression is not an election it is supposed to be a guide for the legislature, when ready to act.

In order to legalize this method a constitutional amendment must be adopted, and this can only be done by the demand of two-thirds of the states.

Senator Borah of Idaho, perhaps the most noted "wind-jammer" in congress, proposed to ignore the law by demanding immediate action, but Senator Carter cooled him down by suggesting that the proposal would alter the fundamental law of the land, with less consideration than is ordinarily given to a bridge bill.

Public sentiment is frequently a creature of impulse and is as easily aroused as mob sentiment, and the lower house of congress, where this hysteria for electing senators by popular vote is most pronounced, is an object lesson, in concrete form, of impulsive action.

Every last member of the people's house is playing to the galleries at home. One election follows another so closely that the campaigns are a veritable whirl of continuous performance. Anything to please the dear people at home, from an appropriation to make a dry creek navigable, to a public building at government expense, is called statesmanship with a big "S."

One of these long-sighted patriots established a record for economy, the other day, by introducing a bill to have the bath tubs removed from the basement of the capitol, and the attendants separated from the may-rail. He took a bath before he left home, and would be back before the next one was due.

Wisconsin has a group of statesmen who believe that United States senators should be elected by the people, instead of by the people's representatives, as the constitution provides, and other western states are clamoring for the same reform.

This sentiment is largely a creature of impulse, and it is to be hoped that no hasty action will result. The fathers knew what they were about when they drafted this clause of the constitution. The Christian Science Monitor, in commenting, says:

"Whatever may be the sentiment of the country with reference to the desirability of a change in the method of selecting United States senators, it is safe to say that the country will not approve of a hasty or emotional decision in the matter."

"In the course of a decade the country thinks it wants many radical innovations or alterations, and thinks that these would be corrective and improving; and in the course of a decade it changes its opinion almost as many times, especially where the proposed changes impinge upon fundamentals."

"The country has provided safeguards against its own impulsiveness. One of these is the senate itself. Whatever may be the clamor outside, and however responsive the popular branch of the national legislature may be to its demands, the country expects the senate to be calm, deliberate, conservative, judicious."

"This is the province of the upper chamber. It was established as a check upon the lower. With all the complaints at times against the seemingly sluggish procedure of the upper body, the people are inwardly glad that it moves with caution."

"Postponement of decisive action in this matter will simply give the country as well as the senate further opportunity of thinking it all over. Delay cannot prejudice the proposition in the least. The question is too important to be dealt with in an off-hand manner, or to be decided with regard simply for the public opinion of the hour. What is proposed is to undo a part of the work performed by the wisest and most patriotic group of citizens the country has ever known. It may be quite proper to do this in our time, but it will not be quite proper to do it without giving every phase of it adequate and serious consideration."

eration?" was the question asked of one of these timber pirates, and his reply was: "What do I care for the next generation?"

That's the spirit which prevails to large extent in the North as well as in the South, and because of this indifference the conservation of natural resources has developed as a necessity.

Every new generation is a debtor to generations ahead, and the people living today enjoy the fruits of other men's labors, in greater abundance than ever before.

The tree planting proposition is a good one, and entitled to every encouragement.

It requires from twenty-five to fifty years to grow a forest, and no time should be lost in planting the seed.

The noted Standard Oil case is now in the hands of the supreme court, with arguments closed for both the defense and prosecution. The court is to decide whether or not the great corporation shall be dissolved, and this decision will be final. The decision, which may not be rendered before early summer, will be awaited with interest by many of the large corporations. It is just possible that the Standard Oil company may be succeeded by John D. Rockefeller & Co.

The attack on Senator Stephenson by his political enemies in Wisconsin, will receive scant courtesy at the hands of the United States senate. The senator's money was good enough when it was flowing into their channels, but assumed a tainted hue when diverted into other channels. It makes all the difference in the world "whose ox is gored."

The Binding Twine bill is the first on the docket at Madison, and from the make-up of the legislature it is likely to go through with a "whoop." The state has about as much use for a twine binder plant as it has for an aeroplane factory.

This is a busy year for the solons at Washington. When they get through with Lorimer they can tackle "Uncle Ike," and when he is exhausted there is a little more down in Oklahoma that a bill had discovered, which may need attention.

I'm sitting in my easy chair before the fireside's cheerful glare. All modern conveniences are at my command. I have at my elbow the electric lights and the electric fan. I have at my elbow the electric lights and the electric fan. I have at my elbow the electric lights and the electric fan.

Tree planting. The National Business League of America has started a movement to restore the forests by educating the American boy in the planting and culture of trees, and the plan is meeting with popular favor.

The thought was suggested by the National Forestry Bureau, and encouraged by Clifford Pinchot, the noted scientist in tree culture.

The plan is to organize the farmers' boys throughout the country, and instruct them in tree planting. The organization is to be a wheel within a wheel, commencing with the township as the unit, and taking in the county, state, and nation. The governor of each state to be the official head, and the president of the United States to be in general command.

The necessity for concerted action is stated in the fact that more than 300,000,000 acres of American forests have been consumed or destroyed by fire, and that unless something is done to make good the loss the timber supply will soon be exhausted.

The planting of a forest tree has in it a tinge of philanthropy. Unlike the rapidly maturing fruit tree, which rewards the planter, the forest tree is of slow growth, and can only be of service to the next generation.

Down through the turpentine districts of the South today, are thousands of acres of dead timber. The life of a tree girdled for turpentine, is from eight to ten years. The men who own the land gather their crop until the sap is exhausted, and then desert it for fresh fields.

"What will become of the next generation?"

and find the clatter on the blink. We lived like horses in those days, and yet, much to my own amaze, I brag and brag, in prose and rhyme, about the good old vanished times!

No one thinks of "kicking" because he has to await his turn to be waited upon at the postoffice, railroad ticket office, dry goods stores, grocery or market, but many expect to be waited upon instantaneously when they use a telephone, no matter how many calls the operator has received ahead of theirs. They seem to think that for the 3 to 8 cents a day they pay for service, the company should maintain an operator for their exclusive use.

Think it over and be reasonable. Don't scold the operator. She is a very busy person engaged in a nerve racking business. Don't blame her if the party you want is not in the house or is slow in answering.

RIBBONS AWARDED TO ARISTOCRACY

OF THE FEATHERED TRIBE AT THE WEST SIDE RINK THIS MORNING.

CROWDS MUCH INTERESTED

Exhibits in Certain Classes Are Considered Way Above the Average By Those Competent To Know About Such Things.

Today is ribbon day at the West Side Rink where the aristocracy of the feathered tribe are holding forth. The chosen few are looking down with scorn at their more unfortunate neighbors who fail to sport the blue, red, white or green designation of perfection of their species.

Not all the ribbons are up yet, but enough of them so that the visitor can judge for himself what stands for perfection in the feathered fowls and can not help admiring the proud attitude of the inhabitants of the coop as their shrill cackles of joy and excitement are heard. Chicken show parties are all the rage this week and many have been planned for tonight Friday and Saturday evenings for the exhibit does not close until Saturday night, no coops being taken away until Sunday morning.

The crowds this morning started in early in the day and continued to increase in number until it is expected that it will prove the banner exhibit day of show. However Saturday will show a big attendance as many from the surrounding country will be here for a peek at the fancy birds of the whole of Southern Wisconsin.

The three breeds which stand out above the rest, were the White and Barred Plymouth Rocks and the White Crested Black Fowls. In the estimation of Mr. Helmreich, the judge, the exhibit of the latter this show, were better than could be found even in Canada, where the breed is supposed to be at their best. The Rhode Island Reds, both single and rose comb, were pronounced by Mr. Helmreich to be above those of any show so far held in the country. There were 187 of this breed on exhibition, 120 of which were of the rose comb variety.

Supt. D. M. Harless of the county asylum and poor farm brought in a number of his wards today to see the show, and through the kindness of the management, they were shown about the building.

Of course the hens have not taken a rest during the show and not a few eggs have been the result. Some might be curious to know what disposition is made of those. The regulations of the association say that all "eggs laid during the show will be gathered by the superintendent and their vitality destroyed, and they will be disposed of as directed by the board of directors at the close of the show."

Now this regulation is lived up to as far as possible by the officials but the security of eggs in these annual affairs always leads to the doubt of the ability of some of the mightiest to restrain themselves. Mr. Helmreich, the judge, who has been called "Honest Helmreich" by those who know him, has expressed himself as considering the display of fowls at this show as the equal of any he has seen. This means a great deal as he has been associated with some of the best shows in the United States in the past few years.

The awards in the single comb Barred Leghorns were all taken by local birds. They are as follows: Joe Jambunt, 1st and 2nd pullets, 2nd cockerel; Buchanan, 3rd and 4th pullets, 1st, 2nd, 3rd hens, 2nd cock and 1st cockerel; E. H. Parker, 3rd cockerel.

Again in the single comb Rhode Island Reds the honors went entirely to Janesville owners: with the exception of one group which carried away a number of ribbons to Hollet. The winners in this class were as follows: P. H. Kopp, 1st cock and pullet, 2nd hen and 4th cockerel; N. F. Cowles, 3rd cockerel; A. W. Blanchard, 1st hen, 3rd cock, 3rd hen and pullet and 4th cock; Clinton Barker, 2nd pullet and 3rd cock; Henry Pratt, 1st and 2nd cockerel and 4th pullet.

In the rose comb variety the following awards were made: Fred Kopp, 1st pullet; P. L. Hodson, Lima, 2nd pullet and 3rd hen and cockerel; Neil McVicar, 4th hen; W. L. Elphie, 1st cockerel and 2nd hen; P. L. Hodson, 1st cockerel; Earl Marten, Munroe, 1st pullet, 3rd cock and 4th cockerel; A. W. Blanchard, 1st, 1st, 2nd and 4th cock; Frank Bingham, Koshkonong, 3rd pullet.

The pen awards will not be known until the last thing and this will not be probably, until the last day of the show as it is not expected that the individual ribbons will be in place much before tomorrow morning.

One of the oddities of the present show is a trunk hen owned by Harry Sheldon. It is supposed to be a Black Orpington but there is some deep mystery surrounding its birth as it is covered with a sort of downy fur instead of feathers and has a bald face. Another of the show's unaccountables is a bantam hen which tips the scales at just nine ounces.

LOOKS LIKE A MURDER

W. P. Pope Disappears and Mysterious Surrounds Cause.

Had $500 When He Left Home on Collection Trip and Hat Is Found Covered With Blood.

Ogdensburg, N. Y., Jan. 19.—W. P. Pope, of Bromptonville, a prominent merchant, left his home for Stokes, where he was going to collect money. He never reached his destination and his horse, cut and bleeding, has been found in the country.

A search was made by the local authorities, but no trace of Pope's body could be found. His hat was found covered with blood. The snow was trampled down hard and indications were that a terrible struggle had taken place there. The snow was covered with blood and footprints could be seen. Pope had over $500 in his possession when he left home. He was about 40 years of age.

MRS. SCHENK STRICKEN

Strain on Nerves in Court Trial Beginning to Show.

Judge Jordan Issues Order Barring All Women from Attending Court During Poison Case Trial.

Wheeling, W. Va., Jan. 19.—A dramatic incident of the trial of Mrs. Laura Farnsworth Schenk came during the latter part of the session when the woman accused of administering arsenic to her millionaire husband suddenly lurched forward and dropped into a huddled mass. She was taken to her cell while a recess was ordered.

Physicians attended the woman and later she returned to the court room, pale, shivering and trembling. The strain on her nerves was now beginning to tell, and it is said she is often hysterical in her cell after court sessions.

Judge Lewis S. Jordan issued an order barring all women from the court room. When pages cried this order through the halls and corridors of the court house, a man just entering suddenly fell over in a faint. Physicians said he had an epileptic fit.

Attorney J. J. P. O'Brien, for the defense, made a startling statement when he said that he would summon every physician and druggist in the city of Wheeling and ask each one if he sold or gave poison of any kind to Mrs. Schenk. This means that over a hundred doctors and druggists will be summoned.

NEWSPAPER MAN STRICKEN

Two Men Suffer from Ptomaline Poisoning After Drinking Chocolate.

Elizabeth, N. J., Jan. 19.—After drinking a cup of chocolate at a Newark restaurant, John J. Hill, a local newspaper man and athlete, was stricken violently ill at his home here.

A physician pronounced the case one of ptomaine poisoning. Daniel Hall, a brother, was also made ill by the chocolate. Both are confined to their beds and have suffered much pain.

VALET STEALS GEM

Thomas Brown, American, Has Servant Arrested for Stealing Gem.

Paris, Jan. 19.—Thomas Brown, of Philadelphia, lately caught his man servant robbing him. He refused to prosecute the man, but dismissed him.

The valet when he left, took a diamond ring worth 10,000 francs to a Rue de La Paix jeweler to have a missing stone replaced. The bill for this was sent to Mr. Brown, who thereupon had his ex-valet arrested.

A Hiccough Cure.

A correspondent writes to us from King's Lynn to the effect that he has found hanging by the hands with the legs clear of the ground, the hands well apart and the breath held for say fifteen seconds, an infallible cure. With children, hold them up off the ground by both hands. Our correspondent states that he has never found this method to fail.—London Globe.

Careful Burdette.

Robert J. Burdette, when a boy was lecturing his younger brother John one evening about sleeping with his mouth wide open. "Johnny," said Bob, "you will never live to be married if you sleep with your mouth open. You'll die of consumption if you don't stop." "But you sleep that way sometimes," replied John. "Yes, that's true," replied Bob; "but whenever I feel myself sleeping that way, with my mouth open, I get up and shut it."

Convicts Building Prison.

At the federal prison at Leavenworth, Kan., 955 prisoners are engaged in building around and over them the very prison in which they will be confined. This institution, when completed, will be the largest and best equipped federal prison in the country. It was begun in 1898 and probably will not be finished for several years. It has a frontage of 800 feet, with a depth of 900 feet in the rear.

WOMAN'S PAGE

The Evening Chit-Chat

By RUTH CAMERON.

HOW VERY much better and more clever people are when you know them.

Doesn't that come over you every once in a while? It does with me. Tell you what brought it this time.

An appeal for help came to me from a woman in need of work. It was a most pathetic appeal. It wrung my heart with its story of loneliness and utterly handicapped struggle and failure and hopelessness. Unfortunately it came from a distance and from a locality where I had absolutely no influence in procuring the particular kind of work this woman wanted. So I sat down and thought over my acquaintances in that locality. They were few. The only one who seemed at all likely to possess the needed influence was a girl I knew but slightly. She was a very pretty girl, apparently rather frivolous, but I thought she might be able to say the word that was needed so I sent her the appeal.

By the next mail—the NEXT MAIL, mind you, not a week or two later as so many of us might have answered—a splendid letter came back from her assuring me of her real delight in this opportunity and outlining an excellent plan of campaign to be put into immediate execution.

Now, I had realized the girl was nice and charming and pretty, but you see I hadn't realized anywhere near how good she was.

I think that's the way with a good many of us. We don't give each other credit for half that's in us. In the same way I seldom grow to know people well but I am led to marvel at how much more clever they are than I had thought.

The whole thing is in knowing people and also in liking them. For most people expand in the warmth of friendship into quite different beings from what they are to the casual acquaintance or stranger.

How often we see two married people on the car or have two married people among our acquaintances of whom we say, "How COULD she have married him?" or vice versa.

We think we are pointing out the blindness of love. As a matter of fact the blindness is ours.

She probably married him because she knew him, and helped bring out qualities in him that we can never see.

It was her vision, not her blindness, that made her love him. What a world of wonderful people it is after all, and how little room in it there is for hate or dislike or harsh judgments.

In your pet antipathy, if you could know him or her—the Mrs. Somebody you stigmatize as superficial and frivolous, the Mr. Somebody you put down as a cad—you would doubtless find splendid qualities if you only knew them better.

Isn't it a wonderful thought?

men of the twentieth century. But one understands, too, that he saw far beyond all these things and so left an influence that pervades the quietest inner corner of the twentieth century heart—just as it must have influenced the hearts of those who lived and touched hands with him in his day.

But it isn't a question of one writing books that live through the generations, or the sympathy that will move men a hundred years after the coming of death. It is the simple thing of a man making himself useful in his own day and generation, in his own little circle of relatives and friends. It is doing the little necessary things of today, putting the sympathetic touch to all that we attempt that makes us live beyond our own time.

Danderine

and we can PROVE IT!

A lady from Minnesota writes: As a result of using Danderine, my hair is close to five feet in length.

Beautiful Hair at Small Cost

HAIR troubles, like many other diseases, have been wrongly diagnosed and altogether misunderstood. The hair itself is not the thing to be treated, for the reason that it is simply a product of the scalp and wholly dependent upon its action. The scalp is the very soil in which the hair is produced, nurtured and grown, and it alone should receive the attention it merits and to be expected. It would do no earthly good to treat the stem of a plant with a view of making it grow and become more beautiful—the soil in which the plant grows must be attended to. Therefore, the scalp in which the hair grows must receive the attention if you are to expect it to grow and become more beautiful. Loss of hair is caused by the scalp drying up, or losing its supply of moisture or nutriment; when baldness occurs the scalp has simply lost all its nourishment, leaving nothing for the hair to grow upon in a plant or even a tree would die under similar conditions.

The natural thing to do in either case, is to feed and replenish the soil or scalp as the case may be, and your crop will grow and multiply as nature intended it should.

Knowledge of Danderine has a most wonderful effect upon the hair glands and tissues of the scalp. It is the only remedy for the hair ever discovered that is similar to the natural hair foods or liquids of the scalp.

It penetrates the pores quickly and the hair soon shows the effects of its wonderfully exhilarating and life-producing qualities.

One Danderine bottle is enough to convince you of its great worth as a hair growing and hair beautifying remedy—try it and see for yourself.

CHAPTER XVII.

A State of Siege.

Cayley's discovery of the tracks furnished the last element of the drama which was to play itself out that winter upon this stage which had been so strangely set for it. It was just three days since, flying slowly northward before a mild southerly breeze, the ice pack below him, he caught his first glimpse of the unknown land where Captain Fielding had met his tragic fate so many years before. Three days since he had witnessed, from aloft, the murder of a man he might have saved, the man to whom, had he saved him, he might have turned for exoneration from a stain upon his name which was now ineradicable.

Three days ago he had thought his world was empty, swept clean of human concern and human affection. Three days ago he had not known that Jeanne Fielding existed.

As for the identity of the monster who had left the proof of his existence in those tracks which Philip had discovered in the snow, they of course had no certain knowledge; nevertheless, they entertained but little doubt that he was Roscoe himself. The footprints were immense, Cayley said, and their distance apart bespoke the stride of a giant.

If it were Roscoe who had been crouching there behind the boulder, then it seemed to them unlikely that he was here alone; unlikely that he had not at least two or three of his crew with him.

That idea, when it first occurred to them, brought little added terror with it. The person of the monstrous murderous ruffian, who was the chief, dwarfed his subordinates to pygmies. Yet when they came to think over the situation, reasonably, this uncertainty as to the number of their enemy proved a vital element in it. It put an unequivocal veto upon Cayley's first plan, which was to start out at once and take the aggressive against their enemy, before he should have time to move against them.

This bit of beach where the hut stood was practically fortified. The cliff behind it was absolutely sheer, and was capped with deep, perpetual snow. Half a mile to the westward was the promontory, and about half a mile up the beach from the hut, to the eastward, the glacier projected its lee masses in a long-due out to seaward. This glacier provided the only practicable means of entrance to the interior valley and the ledge where the gold was.

By means of a large scale map, Cayley pointed out to Jeanne this advantage of their position. "So long as we stick to this bit of beach," he said, "we can't be reached nor surprised. No one can attack us without either coming down the glacier at one end, or around the promontory at the other. From either direction they've got to approach without cover. Of course if there are a lot of them, we can't have any chance, but it may be there's only one, and it's likely that there are not more than three."

"But at night," said the girl, "at night there'll be nothing to prevent their coming as close as they please. They may be out there, not a dozen yards away."

"They're not doing much if they are. We're securely barricaded here, and they can't attempt to break in without giving us fair warning. Unless there are too many of them we should beat them at that game. Not the time to look out for them to when we're outside the hut, out on the beach doing the things we'll have to do—bringing in firewood, looking for more game, and so on."

"Shall we have to do that? Can't we just stay in here, safe?"

"The daylight will answer that question for me," he said. "We must make the most of it. A month from now there'll be but little. We must make prisoners of ourselves until the winter

"He's Afraid," said Jeanne, After a Little Thoughtful Silence.

"Does it for us. There is one thing, though," he added thoughtfully after a little silence, "one thing that I must do at once, and that is to destroy these sheds where they kept their stores. They would furnish a cover—a good cover as any enemy could ask for. They hinder our view up the beach."

"How long do you suppose it will last?" she asked, in a voice that shook a little. "How long can it last? How long can we live like that, even supposing that our watch is effective and that they aren't able to surprise us?" She clasped her hands, with a shudder, and gripped them between her knees. "Oh, if it would only happen soon," she went on, "whatever it is!"

"What I don't understand," said Cayley, "is why they haven't attacked us already. Why have they waited until we are fortified and secure? Why didn't they attack us yesterday morning when they would have found us helpless?"

"Surely," said Jeanne, "he couldn't have hoped for a better opportunity to attack us than he had when I was alone there in the twilight, before you came flying down out of the sky; and you said he was quite near. Why do you suppose he didn't? Why do you suppose he waited?"

"And even after I came down," said Cayley, "I was helpless for a minute while I was getting clear of my planes. Yes, that was his chance, and yet he waited. After we had gone, he apparently scaled the cliff, for his tracks led right up to it, and then disappeared. It's not quite so precipitously steep there as it is here, but I would hardly have dreamed that a human being could climb it."

"He's afraid," said Jeanne after a little thoughtful silence, "simply afraid. But if he's the man we think he is, it wouldn't be a human fear. It must be superstitious in some way. It wouldn't be wonderful if he felt that after the two glimpses he had of you I remember how I felt at first when you alighted on the ice beside me. He's seen you twice, remember. The first time at night in the fog; the second time in broad day, with the sun on your wings. No, it isn't strange if he thinks of you, not as a man at all, but as a sort of terrible angel keeping guard over me. When I go very long without seeing you, or when I see you in flight, I get to thinking of you in that way myself."

"If that's the way he thinks of me," said Cayley, "we'll try not to disturb him. A belief like that is an item on our side of the ledger, certainly. And we haven't any such balance in our favor that we can afford to throw an advantage away, even a small one."

Really the balance of advantage between them and their enemy was amazingly even. They had the hut, the enemy the stores. They had Captain Fielding's journal, their enemy the experience and practical knowledge of the country. They were two with but a single weapon between them. Their enemy, for aught they knew, might be one or a half a dozen; and how armed, they did not know.

Fortunately, no prophetic vision enabled them to anticipate, on that first evening, the length of time that that precarious life and death balance would maintain itself. They had agreed, Philip and Jeanne, that the only thing to do was to wait and to maintain an unwinking vigilance. But both of them thought of the duration of this wait in terms of hours, or, at most, days. Had they foreseen that it would stretch itself out into weeks and months, they might well have despaired.

There were two things that kept them from succumbing to despair. The first was that they never really permitted themselves to hope, to indulge in any thoughts of a summer's day when their horizon should be cut by the spars and funnels of a ship bringing relief. They were simply going to live one day at a time. For every day that they could snatch out of the hand of death, they would give thanks. It was the only attitude possible for people in their condition.

And the thing that helped them to maintain it was the abundance of necessary routine occupation. They divided their day into watches. Cayley slept from four o'clock in the afternoon until midnight and then kept watch alone, as the girl had done, until eight. During that period they remained inside the hut. The day, from eight until four, they spent out of doors, when the condition of the weather made this possible, either at work or merely tramping up and down for exercise.

At first there was a good deal of work to do. Tearing down the sheds which clustered about the hut, and reducing their frames and planking to firewood was an arduous task, but he worked at it until it was done, Jeanne standing sentinel all the time.

When it was done, they were practically secure against surprise, for from their windows, with the aid of a field-glass which Cayley had found in the observatory, they were able to sweep the whole beach absolutely clean, in both directions.

And almost every day while the light lasted, with Jeanne, armed with the revolver, keeping watch before the hut, Cayley took to his wings and patrolled the beach, from the glacier to the promontory, high up above the level of the crest of the cliff. His flight was always along the same track. He never winged his way inland nor out to sea.

There were two reasons for this. He dared not go so far away from Jeanne that a flash and a swoop would not bring him to her side. The other reason was, that if a superstitious fear of this great man-bird were really what deterred their enemy from attacking them, it was well to let him believe that immunity from this portent could be secured by keeping away from this particular stretch of beach.

"As the shortening days sped by and began to get themselves reckoned into weeks, the conviction grew upon Philip and Jeanne that their securest protection lay in his wings, in the terrorizing effect upon their invisible, silent enemy of the majestic winged apparition which was so often seen soaring in midday above the hut and the little stretch of beach surrounding it. Something was protecting them evidently. Almost every week brought some evidence, not only of the existence but the nearness of their enemy. They never actually caught sight or sound of him, but some times when the wind blew from the right quarter they could make out, with their field-glasses, a wrack of brownish smoke, such as would be given off by burning whale oil, drifting down from somewhere along the glacier, and made visible by the dazzling whiteness of that background.

And sometimes they saw track in the newly fallen snow, never coming very near the hut, but trespassing a little way, either down from the glacier or up from the headland, upon the stretch of beach they were defending. They never found the tracks of more than a single man, and these were always the same. So that they came to believe, although they could not know, that they had only one man to deal with.

They sometimes speculated on the question whether he was Roscoe or some other member of the Walrus crew; really, in fact, they found it impossible to hope that it was any other than he.

They got proof of his identity, or what amounted to it, along toward the end of October, Cayley's keen eyes caught, one day, from up aloft where he was soaring, the glint of something on the beach near the foot of the headland. He circled down in a long swoop, caught it up without alighting, and mounted into the air, a trick of aeronautics which made Jeanne, accustomed as she was by now to seeing him in flight, catch her breath a little.

When he descended and alighted beside her a few moments later, he showed her a sheath knife, the hilt of which was a rudely carved walrus tusk. The hand of the last user of it had blood upon it, and its imprint upon the surface of the ivory was plainly to be seen. The lines in the palm were traceable and, lengthwise, along the side of the handle, the print of an immense thumb.

"You see," said Cayley quietly, "he was using this knife left-handed."

The girl paled a little as she handed the weapon back to him, but she spoke quietly enough:

"It's good to know," she said, "almost a relief."

His latest gift is that of thirty thousand dollars to Transylvania University, this city. If you carry your camera when in a visit to Pompeii or others of the recently excavated ruins, you may take as many photographs as you please, but you are forced to pay a small fee for each plate exposed. There are many parts of the world where the use of a camera may not be actually illegal, but yet is excessively dangerous.

PAYS TO BE COURTEOUS

Kindly Manner Factor in the Growth of Telephone Service

That courtesy is an important factor in securing efficient service is nowhere more apparent than in using the telephone.

Operators of the Wisconsin Telephone Company are courteous to patrons for two reasons. One is that the company, because of its experience in providing service, requires them to be, and the other is that they find their duties are more quickly and satisfactorily discharged when they temper their work with kindly manner.

Large users of telephone service have come to realize the value of courtesy. They find that efforts of those directed by them, whether in getting a number over the telephone or in performing other duties about their offices, are but forth with greater alacrity when they use courtesy in direction than when the manner of direction is brusque.

Big business men and big professional men and women long ago found that a kindly manner is an incentive to best efforts on the part of others; that all human beings more readily do their best to please when approached in a kindly manner.

That the Wisconsin Telephone Company makes courtesy an important feature in its treatment of patrons deserves an important place in consideration of the fact that telephone service in Wisconsin has grown until this company has 25,000 subscribers in the state.

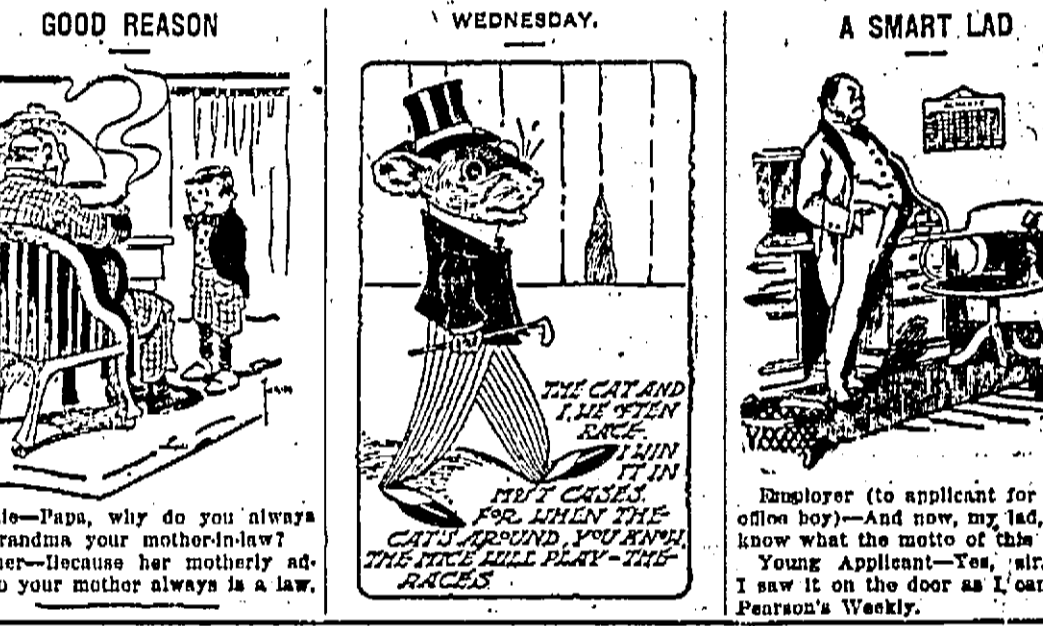

Not only is each subscriber in touch with the other 24,999 subscribers in Wisconsin, but each also is in touch with the entire Bell system, which has connection with 40,000 cities, towns and villages in the United States.

To have telephone service means that you have at your immediate command 25,000,000 stations in the United States through which you may communicate; that the instant you go to your telephone you have at your disposal a system which has been provided at a cost of over $700,000,000, and to operate which requires more employees than there are men in the regular army of Uncle Sam.

And every employee will be courteous.—Telephone Talk No. 849.

There Are Certain Signs Which Advertisers Will Do Well To Consider In Selecting Their Advertising Mediums.

One of the most significant is: "How does the publication secure its advertising-business?"

This is a sure index of the publication's real advertising worth. If it's a weak sister, it will swap its space for most anything. It will cut its rate, allow free "write-ups" and give you a free insertion now and then just to make you think it is liberal, when, in fact, by such methods the publisher is confessing his weakness and inability to keep his columns full in the market of keen discrimination.

And you, Mr. Advertiser, have the evidence at hand to determine the real live, paying publications from those which are second best, to put it mildly.

Watch their soliciting and advertising methods in behalf of their own publications. How do they get their business, not alone from you, but from others?

One of the best advertising men in the country recently said: "The man who will cut his established price will rob you if he has the chance."

And this is the way it is done: The man who will cut his price has his price so fixed that he can cut it and still take good care of his own interests. The published price is put out to catch the buyers who do not know of his sub-basement methods.

It may be of interest to know that every advertisement carried in these columns is paid for on a cash basis, that no trade deals are solicited or accepted.
